Moffat
In 1913, just under half a century ago, my father, the late R. Burnham Moffat, compiled and published privately "PIERREPONT GENEALOGIES - from Norman times to 1913, with particular attention paid to the line of descent from Hezekiah Pierpont, youngest son of Rev. James Pierpont of New Haven". Several years ago I thought it would be interesting to bring this record up to date, but I did not go back to Hezekiah Pierpont.

Rather, I chose to start the record with his grandson, Hezekiah Beers Pierpont, because he was the progenitor of the Pierreponts - the only family of that name in the country - and because he founded what was for several generations a closely-knot family; indeed it is only in the last few years that the sense of family has begun to disappear through the inevitable multiplication and dispersal of descendants.

Hezekiah and Anna Maria Constable, his wife, had thirteen children of whom ten grew to adulthood, nine married, and eight had children. These ten were bound together largely by affection, but also very literally for some years by the exigencies of the settlement of Hezekiah's estate nearly all of which was in unimproved lands. Even the disputes which arose over the interpretation of his will did not rend the family apart permanently.

Forty-one of Hezekiah's fifty-three grandchildren attained their majority. They were my grandfather's generation, and they knew all their first cousins as well as their uncles and aunts. In turn, my generation heard much from them of the generations that preceded us, and in fact knew many of them personally. I have even known quite a number of my mother's second cousins - which is perhaps unusual in this modern world.

In this book I have not delved into ancestry. The Pierreponts are descended by the left hand from the early Plantagenet kings of England and can therefore trace a line of ancestry back for 53 generations as far as Childeric I, King of Lothringia, who was born prior to 458 A.D. For Toni King /No (11)511112, below/, the most junior, though not the youngest, descendant of Hezekiah and Anna, Childeric I was just one, even if the only identifiable one, of her 5,487,747,267,997,696 (approximately 5½ quadrillion) ancestors in that generation alone - an interesting figure as experts estimate that in Childeric's time there were probably not more than 300 million people on all the globe including Africa, Asia, Australia, and the Americas as well as Europe. Hunting distant illustrious ancestors has never appeared to me to be a very rewarding pursuit.

In Part I I have, however, given an outline of the American forebears of Hezekiah and Anna starting in each instance, when I can, with the immigrant. I have also included such information as I have about these individuals and about Hezekiah and Anna themselves. This information has been taken from unpublished material compiled by my father, notes made by my great-uncle, John Jay Pierrepont /No 43, below/, and letters, journals, and memoranda by Hezekiah, by Anna, and by their son, Henry Evelyn Pierrepont /No 4, below/.

Part II is a record of the descendants of Hezekiah Beers Pierpont and Anna Maria Constable. Here, and also in the Index, names which appear in capital letters are those of descendants. Names underscored are those of individuals who have married a descendant. A capital letter, instead of a number, before a name indicates a step-child of a descendants. A + before such a letter denotes that the step-child was a half-brother or -sister of a descendants. A small letter before a name indicates an adopted child.

The numbering system is intended not only to permit additions without disturbing numbers already assigned, but also to show relationships easily. The digits denote the order of birth, the first digit representing the children of Hezekiah and Anna, the second digit their children, the third digit the children of those children, etc. Thus, 4 is Henry Evelyn Pierrepont, fourth child of Hezekiah; 42 is the second child of 4. 422 is the second child of 42. A difference in the final digit in the same generation indicates a brother or sister.; in the last two digits, a first cousin; in the last three digits, a second cousin.

Five illustrations have been included in this book.

The picture of Hezekiah Beers Pierpont is from the portrait by Henry Inman now in the possession of Mrs John Jay Pierrepont /See No 4241, below/.

The portrait of Anna Maria Constable was painted by H.A. Loop, a pupil of Gilbert Stuart. That also in in the possession of Mrs John Jay Pierrepont.

The ground plan of the old Pierrepont Mansion on Brooklyn Heights was drawn from actual surveys made in 1821, 22, and 23 by Willaim Constable Pierrepont /No 1, below/. The map which has been reproduced showing the old ground plan in relation to the new streets which were cut through in the 1850s was made by him in January, 1868. It is in my possession.

The two views of the Pierrepont Mansion in 1838 are from engravings owned by John Pierrepont /No. 4253, below/.

The view of the back of the house which faced the harbor shows clearly the octagonal rooms added before 1802, the piazza built in 1806, and the wing on the south end of the house added in 1822. The building visible beyond the wing was Hezekiah's office. To the left of the Mansion was a U-shaped utility building. The nearest end was the wine room, behind it the coal house. Back of the coal house stretch the wood house across the base of the U. The far end, parallel with the coal house and wine room, housed the bottle rack, the hen house, and the shop. The small building at the extreme left was the ash house. The garden of the property later known as No 1 Pierrepont Place began five feet beyond the ash house.

In the picture of the east side or front of the Mansion the two gable ends at the right are the shop and wine room respectively. Nearer the house is the well. The low structure in the loop of the driveway is the ice house. A gate to the garden is visible at the left.

There are over 270 living descendants of Hezekiah Beers Pierpont and Anna Maria Constable. They live in all parts of the United States, in England, in Morocco, in Germany. Already there have been 48 great-great-great-great-grandchildren. The family founded by Hezekiah and Anna has now so multiplied and scattered that no further recording of their descendants as a Pierrepont Family record would seem called for. So with this little volume, this record - at least as recorded by me - comes to an end.

Biographic Notes

- 111 Srgt. Francis Nichols was born in England and was in Stratford, Conn., in 1639 among the first settlers. He is said to have owned land at Southold, Long Island. The name of his first wife is unknown. His second wife was Anne Wines, daughter of Barnabas Wines of Southold, Long Island.
- 78 John Brown came originally from England. As early as 1620 he was in Leyden, Holland, but in what year he came to New England is not known. He is generally spoken of as John Brown of Swansea. He was a Commissioner of the United Colonies, 1645 - 1657; Assistant to the General Court of Plymouth, 1636 - 1654; and a member of the Council of War in 1642 and succeeding years. With Edward Winslow he was patentee of Rehobeth, Massachusetts.
- 56 Isaac Nichols was born in England. He died at Stratford, Conn.
- 48 Anthony Beers came to New England in 1635 with his uncle Richard Beers (who was killed in King Philip's War on September 4, 1675) and settled in Watertown, Mass., where five of his children were born. In 1658 he moved to Roxbury, and the next year to Fairfield, Conn. Like his father before him, he was a mariner and lost at sea.
- His English ancestry would seem to be as follows: His father was James Beers who came originally from Rochester, Kent, but settled in Gravesend. He was master of a ship under Sir Martin Frobisher in 1577. He was lost at sea in 1609. His mother, Hester, died in 1635 at which time he and his uncle came to New England. James Beers was the son of James Bere and Dorothy Kingswood of Rochester. She was a daughter of John Kingswood, Gent. James Bere was a son of John Bere of Rochester and Faith Raydon, daughter of John Raydon, Esq. John Bere was a son of Martin Bere, a notary public and secretary of the diocese of Rochester in 1486, and his wife, who was a daughter of Thomas Nissell of Wrotham, Gent., and his wife, Alice.
- 46 John Thompson of East Haven, Conn., has often been confused with John Thompson, sr., of the nearby settlement of New Haven not only because they were contemporaries in nearby localities but also because the widow of John Thompson of East Haven married Thomas Harrison of Branford, Conn., the brother of Ellen Harrison, wife of John Thompson of New Haven. Nothing is known of John Thompson except that he died at East Haven probably in 1655 and that his children asked for a distribution of their father's estate early in 1671.

44 Captain Alling Ball was at New Haven as early as 1643. In 1650 he became farmer for Rev. John Davenport, and was exempted from militia service while he continued in Mr Davenport's employ. In 1670 he owned a farm adjacent on the north to the Davenport farm. He was a captain in the colonial militia. He married twice: first, Susan; then, Dorothy. Their last names are not known, nor which was Alling jr's mother. Dorothy died at East Haven, Conn., on February 22, 1689/90.

42 John Cooper was one of the New Haven Colony in 1639 the year the settlement took place. He was said to be one of the useful men of that colony filling various town offices and settling disputes between individuals as well as between towns. He moved from New Haven to Stoney River or East Haven about the time the Iron Works were established in 1655 and seems to have been an agent or overseer of the Works. He died at East Haven in 1689.

40 Ralph Hemingway was born in Yorkshire, England, and settled at Roxbury, Mass., prior to 1634, in which year he bought 16 acres, was married on July 5, and made a freeman. He is described as having been "a man servant". Nine years later he was among the donors to a fund for a school. He lived at the east end of the town. He seems to have been active in town affairs.

38 Thomas Willett is best known as the first mayor of New York. He was born at Barley, Hertfordshire, England, in 1605. From 1629 to 1632 he was in Holland associated with the Leyden Congregation. There he obtained that knowledge of the Dutch language and customs which afterwards was so useful to him, and it was also there, probably, that he first met the family of John Brown, whose daughter Mary he married in 1636.

In 1632 Thomas Willett arrived at Plymouth, New England, on the ship "Lion", and at once identified himself with that colony becoming a freeman on January 1, 1633. For thirty years he was engaged largely in shipping and mercantile pursuits. His vessels were employed principally in the coasting trade between Boston and New Amsterdam, but occasionally went as far as Virginia and thence to Holland. But he also, during these years, served as Assistant to the General Court for fourteen years, 1651 - 1664, as Surveyor of Highways, Captain of the Military Force, Delegate to the Massachusetts Bay Colony for advice and counsel, etc.

In 1664 he accompanied Colonel Nicholson in the reduction of New Amsterdam and the following year he was selected to be mayor. In his recommendation, Governor Nicolls described him as "A very honest and able gentlemen who would serve the people well for Mayor and Counselor, being also well known and popular among all classes, and better acquainted with the language, manner and customs of the Dutch than any other Englishman." He assumed the office of mayor on June 12, 1665. After a service of two years as mayor and one year as alderman, he retired to Swansea, Rhode Island, where he lived until his death in 1674.

His wife, Mary Brown, died in Swansea on January 8, 1669. On September, 1671 he married Joanna Boyse, widow of Rev. Peter Prudden of Milford, Conn.

Thomas Willett was the son of Rev. Andrew Willett and Jacobina Goad. Rev. Andrew Willett attended the Collegiate School in the City of Ely, Cambridgeshire, until he was fourteen. He then entered the University of Cambridge and soon thereafter was transferred to Christ Church of which he became a fellow. He took holy orders in 1584. Five years later he was made prebend in the Cathedral at Ely upon his father's resignation therefrom, and in the same year he married Jacobina Goad, daughter of Thomas Goad, D.D., provost of Kings College, Cambridge, by whom he had eighteen children - 11 sons and 7 daughters. Upon the death of his father in 1598 he was made rector of Barley. He was a voluminous writer, some thirty-nine of his writings being still catalogued at the British Museum. As late as 1852, ten volumes of his Synopsis Papismi were reprinted. He was also much sought after as a preacher in London, Cambridge, and elsewhere, and his fame as a controversialist was widely extended. He died as the result of a fall from his horse while returning home from London.

His father was Thomas Willett who, according to a volume published in 1634 entitled The Life and Death of Dr. Andrew Willett (written by Rev. Peter Smith who married one of the seven daughters and succeeded Andrew as Rector at Barley), "was a grave divine, a sub-almoner to King Edward VI, and during the reign of Queen Mary was not only deprived of his service but was likewise enforced for his conscience to forsake his first promotion in the Church at Windsor and betake himself to the house of a truly noble gentleman who, as a faithful Obadiah, hid him in these days of persecution." When Queen Elizabeth came to the throne Mr Thomas Willett (he was not a University man, hence the simple appellation "Mr") was preferred to a prebend in Ely Cathedral and on April 3, 1571, was instituted rector at Barley, Herts., and continued such until his death in 1598.

- 36 Rev. Thomas Hooker graduated from Emmanuel College, Cambridge, receiving the degree of B.A. in 1608 and M.A. in 1611. When next heard of he was a "lecturer" at the Chelmsford Church, Essex, and in that year was "silenced" by Archbishop Laud for non-conformity teachings. A petition and protest was drawn up and signed by fifty clergymen of the Established Church, but to no avail; the order remained in force. It is said that during this enforced silence Hooker established and taught a school at Chelmsford, and that John Eliot, afterwards known as the Apostle to the Indians, was his assistant. The Archbishop still pursued him, however, and about 1630 had him arrested and put under bonds to appear before the Ecclesiastical Courts. Forfeiting these bonds, Hooker fled to Holland, spending two years at Delft, but he was kept under surveillance there by the emissaries of the Archbishop. His acts are noted in the Puritan Records of the fugitives who fled from England to Holland.

In 1633 Hooker returned to England, and the Archbishop sought again to place him under arrest, but he avoided this and with his family came to America in the ship "Griffen" in which were also Rev. Samuel Stone and John Cotton. They arrived at Boston September 3, 1633. Hooker went first to Cambridge, or Newtown as it was then called, and was admitted freeman May 14, 1634. He became pastor of the church there; but he chafed under what he felt to be lack of freedom in Massachusetts. The Church ruled there, no man being allowed to vote unless he were a church member. Out of 3,000 inhabitants of whom two-thirds were men of mature age, there were only 300 qualified electors. Hooker was not in accord with the theocratic idea and in June, 1636, - the same year that Harvard College was founded - he led his congregation of 100 or more men, women, and children to the Connecticut, his wife being carried in a litter. He settled where Hartford now is, and the neighboring towns of Windsor and Wethersfield soon sprang up by similar migrations of the Dorchester and Watertown congregations.

Two years after his arrival in Hartford, Governor Winthrop wrote him to expostulate "about the unwarrantableness and unsafeness of referring matters of counsel or judicature to the body of the people, because the best part is always the least and of that least part the wiser part is always the lesser". Hooker's reply is preserved in full. He answered in part: "In matters of greater consequence which concern the common good, a general council chosen by all to transact business which concerns all, I conceive most suitable to rule and most safe for relief of the whole."

In 1638 the three towns sent representatives to a General Court for the framing of a constitution which should be the basis of the new commonwealth. Hooker preached the opening sermon May 31, 1638, in which he maintained that "the foundation of authority is laid in the free consent of the people"; that "the choice of public magistrates belongs unto the people by God's own allowance"; that "they who have power to appoint officers and magistrates have power also to set the bounds and limitations of the power and place unto which they call them"; and he ended with the exhortation "As God has given us liberty let us take it". On January 14, 1639, a constitution was adopted in which Hooker's hand was plainly discernible. It was the first written constitution in history which created a government. It contained no allusion to the sovereign, the king, the British, or to any government other than Connecticut itself. It did not prescribe church membership as a condition of the right of suffrage. This constitution, says Fiske, marked the beginnings of American democracy, of which Thomas Hooker, more than any other man, deserves to be called father.

Rev. Thomas Hooker was the second of three children of Thomas Hooker who was born in Devonshire about the middle of the 16th century.

- 34 John Stow came from Kent, England. It is thought that he was already at Roxbury and that it was from him that his son-in-law, John Pierpont, bought property in 1656.
- 28 Jonathan Nichols was born in Stratford, Conn., but moved to Derby where he settled. He died in Derby at the age of 34.
- 26 Samuel Uffort during the French and Indian War was on the muster roll of the 13th Connecticut, Captain Hull, (enlisted May 25, 1759, discharged December 16, 1759); on the pay roll of Captain Scranton's company (enlisted March 27, 1760, discharged November 22, 1760); on the muster roll of Captain Pearce's company (1761); and on the pay roll of Captain Thomas Pearce's company (enlisted March 20, 1763, discharged December 3, 1763).
- 24 Barnabas Beers was born in Roxbury but moved to Stratford, Conn., where he settled. He married a Stratford girl.
- 23 Sarah Thompson was born in East Haven, Conn., married there, and died there.
- 22 Captain Alling Ball, jr., seems to have lived his entire life in East Haven. Like his wife, he was born there, married there, and died there.

- 20 Samuel Hemingway was born in Roxbury, Mass., in June, 1636. He appears to have moved to East Haven, Conn., in 1662; married there that same year; and obtained land for a home lot not far from the furnace of the Iron Works which had been erected in 1655, the first in the now State of Connecticut. In 1681 he entered into a written agreement with the Village to build and maintain a grist mill at the furnace dam. On November 26, 1682 he was appointed on a Committee of Four to revise the village records, and was made clerk. "He was a neat, handsome penman." In 1684 he was chosen Selectman, and later the same year Collector of Rates. When a minister was called four years later he contributed £20 towards the £104/10/- required for building the minister's house and fencing the home lot.

- 19 Mary Willett was born at Plymouth on November 10, 1637. Four years after the death of her first husband, Rev. Samuel Hooker, she married, on August 10, 1703, Rev. Thomas Buckingham of Saybrook, Conn.

- 18 Rev. Samuel Hooker, the fourth child and second son of Rev. Thomas Hooker, was born probably at Newtown, now Cambridge, Mass., in 1633. He entered Harvard in 1651 and graduated in 1653. He was ordained in 1657 and preached at Plymouth, Mass., though probably not regularly settled there. In 1661 he moved to Farmington, Conn., becoming the second minister of that town, succeeding his brother-in-law, Rev. Roger Newton, and remaining there until his death in 1697. He was an eloquent preacher. The parsonage was on the east side of South Main Street nearly opposite the road which, at least some years ago, led to the meadows across the stone bridge spanning the Pequabuc River.

- 16 John Pierpont came to New England in 1640. At first he appears to have settled in Ipswich, but in 1656 he purchased, quite possibly from his father-in-law, John Stow, 300 acres where Roxbury and Dorchester, Mass., are now situated giving its name to the latter portion out of compliment to his second cousin, Henry Pierrepont, who had been created Marquis of Dorchester. It is said that during King Philip's War he fortified his place where were "malting mills for grinding and fulling, God having blessed him with a considerable estate". His gravestone in the old burying ground at Eustis and Washington Streets, Roxbury, is inscribed:

"Here lyethe intombed the body of JOHN PIERPONT, who expired ye 7th of December, Anno Dom.
1682, Aetatis suae 65."

John's father was James Pierrepont who owned a large estate in Derbyshire and carried on trade between England and Ireland. During the commercial troubles that developed under the Protectorate, however, he went bankrupt. John's younger brother, Robert Pierpont, apparently came to join him in New England a few years after John arrived, living first at Ipswich and later, when John moved there, at Roxbury where he was malster and miller. Both John and Robert were Puritans and it is almost certain that their father was of like persuasion. After his bankruptcy, James too came to New England to visit his sons. He died at Ipswich presumably in the late 1640's or early 1650's. His widow, Margaret, died in London in January, 1664.

James Pierrepont's father was William Pierrepont, a younger son of Sir George Pierrepont, Knt., of Holme Pierrepont, lord of several manors in Nottingham and Derby, and one of the Knights of the Carpet created at the coronation of Edward VI on February 22, 1547, and of Winifred Thwaites, his wife, daughter of William Thwaites, Esq., of Norfolk. On Sir George's death William's oldest brother became Sir Henry Pierrepont, Knt., of Holme Pierrepont. It was the latter's eldest son, Robert, (1584-1643) - William's nephew - who became the first Earl of Kingston, and it was Robert's son, Henry Pierrepont, (1607-1680) - William's great nephew and John's second cousin - who on March 25, 1645 was created Marquis of Dorchester. It was a great nephew of that Henry Pierrepont who became the first Duke of Kingston.

As to the antecedents of Sir George Pierrepont, the line of Pierrepont descent in England is clear for fifteen generation to the Norman Sir Robert de Pierrepont who fought in the Battle of Hastings, and in Normandy through his grandfather, Sir Hugh de Pierrepont, who flourished about 980 A.D. and was the earliest lord of which there is knowledge of the castle of Pierrepont in Picardy, diocese of Laon, about six miles from S.Sauveur, Normandy. The full line of descent and many interesting details and anecdotes concerning the Pierrepont family in England will be found in Pierrepont Genealogies by R. Burnham Moffat, New York, 1913.

12 Josiah Beers was born at Stratford, Conn., the youngest of the three children of Barnabas Beers.

10 Rev. Jacob Hemingway, ninth and youngest child of Samuel Hemingway, was born at East Haven, Conn. He graduated at Yale College, or, as it was then called, the College at Saybrook, in 1703. On November 20, 1704, the Village of East Haven "Voted to look out for a minister to carry on the publick worship of God amongst us; and it was voted:

1. To seek to Sir Hemingway that he would give them a taste of his gifts in order to settlement in the works of the ministry. And

2. Voted to desire John Potter, Sen., Caleb Chedsey and Ebenezer Chedsey to treat with Sir Hemingway, to get him, if they could, to give them a taste of his gifts in preaching the Word."

"Sir" Hemingway was then 20 years old. The "taste" was evidently good but rather drawn out for it was more than two years later that he wrote:

"Gentlemen, Whereas you have given me notice by two men that you desire me to carry on the work of the ministry in order to settlement among you, I do, therefore, hereby give you notice that, so far as God shall enable me thereunto, I am heartily ready and willing to gratify these your desires, upon these conditions - 1. That you give me £50 yearly, and my wood. 2. That you build me a good convenient dwelling house, within 2 years time, or give me money sufficient to do the same, one-half this year ensuing, and one-half the next. 3. That when it is in your power, you give me a good and sufficient portion of land.

"From my study, 2d Dec'r, 1706.

Jacob Hemingway"

On December 26 the village voted to build Mr Hemingway a house "if they could" in two years and give him £50 pay, and his wood. And to accomplish this they laid a tax of four pence farthing. In 1707 the house was built forty feet long and twenty feet wide on a five acre lot on the southeast corner of the Green. The church was organized as a Congregational Church and gathered on October 8, 1711. Mr Hemingway was ordained pastor the same day. He continued minister at East Haven for fifty years.

8 Rev. James Pierpont graduated from Harvard College in 1681. He settled in New Haven, Conn., as pastor of the First Congregational Church in July, 1685, and remained its pastor until his death in 1714. One of the conditions of his coming was that a home lot and house should be provided him, and also other lands. On January 6, 1684, the Town of New Haven at Town Meeting "by a full vote bought, by exchange of land adjoining Moses Mansfield's home, lot for building upon it a dwelling house for the new Minister Rev. Mr. Pierpont". The house was then built at the east corner of what are now Elm and Temple Streets, and on December 3, 1685, Major Moses Mansfield informed a Town Meeting that "he had received a writing from Rev^d Mr. Pierpont of acknowledgment and thanks for the land and house granted to him". The "other lands" were provided in February, 1687, when there were transferred "to Rev^d James Pierpont - for his encouragement - 7 acres of Salt marsh, also 150 acres of upland East side of East River near Mr. Yate's farm. Also 12 acres of bog meadow adjoining".

Rev. James Pierpont was one of the founders of Yale College over which three of his descendants, the two Timothy Dwights and Theodore Dwight Woolsey, have presided. He was married three times: to Abigail Davenport (no issue); to Sarah Haynes (one daughter); and to Mary Hooker. By her he had eight children: James, who was a tutor at Yale 1722-24 and then for a few years in business, who was guardian for his nephew John and who was twice married (five children by his second wife, Anne Sherman. J. Pierpont Morgan, the banker, was descended from James.); Samuel, Yale 1718, who was ordained a minister on December 10, 1722 and was drowned crossing the Connecticut the following March; Mary, who married Rev. William Russell, pastor at Middletown (nine children); Joseph, a farmer at North Haven, who married Hannah Russell, sister of Rev. William Russell (12 children); Sarah, who married Rev. Jonathan Edwards the well-known metaphysical theologian (11 children, one of whom - Esther - became the mother of Aaron Burr, and another - Mary - the mother of Timothy Dwight, first president of Yale); and Hezekiah Pierpont, the youngest.

- 6 Rev. Nathan Beers was the eldest of the nine children of Josiah Beers. He was born in Stratford, but in 1754 moved to New Haven. Early in July, 1779, there was a raid on New Haven by British troops under General Tryon. As they were leaving the town some British soldiers shot the minister who was standing at the door of his residence at the corner of York and Chapel Streets, then called the "Beers' quarter". He died five days later from his wounds.
- 5 Lydia Hemingway was born at New Haven. Left a widow at 26 with two small sons, she married again about four years after the death of Hezekiah Pierpont the Rev. Theophilus Morgan and bore him two children, William and Amelia. He was a Church of England minister, and it is said that because of this her Puritan father disinherited her. She died at Killingworth, Conn.
- 4 Hezekiah Pierpont was born at New Haven and died there when he was only 29 years old. He left two small sons: Jacob who died in the Army at Crown Point on April 1, 1761 at the age of 23 unmarried, and John Pierpont who was only sixteen months old.
- 3 Sarah Beers was born in Stratford, Conn. She was the second of eight children. Her brothers and sisters became in course of time the uncles and aunts of HEZEKIAH BEERS PIERPONT. The oldest was Isaac Beers who was born November 28, 1742. He imported books and ran a book store in New Haven. He married and had children. Elias Beers was born November 19, 1746. He married three times: Hannah Sabin (no issue); Mary Mills (two children); Jerusha Fitch (nine children). Hannah Beers, born December 19, 1748 - no other information. Josiah Beers, born May 18, 1751, married Gloriana Fairchild (three children). Nathan Beers, born in 1753, remained a bachelor. It was Nathan who, when tidings of Bunker Hill reached New Haven on April 21, 1775, went with the 2nd Company of the Governor's Guards, - Benedict Arnold, Captain, - to Lexington, and served in the army until it was disbanded in September, 1783. As Captain, he commanded the company which stood guard over Major Andre the night before his execution. Nathan was over 90 when he died. Mary Beers - no information. Thomas Beers - no information.

For thirty years after the death of her husband, John Pierpont, Sarah Beers continued to live in the house that he had built in 1767. On a visit to New Haven in July 1817 ANNA MARIA CONSTABLE found her mother-in-law "very bright and smart, but sadly deaf. I was quite in a dilemma in the evening with Uncle Nathan, Elias, and Uncle Isaac all deaf who assembled together to call on me. I was quite exhausted trying to say a little to all". Her deafness increased but she found comfort in reading the Bible of which she was very fond. She was 90 when she died in 1835. The older children of HEZEKIAH BEERS PIERPONT knew their grandmother well and often spoke of her to their children.

- 2 John Pierpont was born in New Haven and resided most of his infancy and youth with his uncle and guardian, James Pierpont, at the original family home built in 1686. He inherited a large estate from his parents, but during his minority a considerable portion of the property was lost by his guardian who sought at his death in 1776 to make good the loss by devising the old mansion to his ward and by bequeathing to him the portraits of Rev. James Pierpont and Mary Hooker. (Now the property of Allen Evarts Foster - No (11)24, below; on loan to Yale University.)

John Pierpont and Sarah Beers were married in 1767 and moved at once into a new house just completed for them which was built on the ancestral lot on Elm Street on the north side of the Green. (The house continued in the family until the death of their granddaughter, Miss Caroline Hooker Foster, in 1900, when it was sold to Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes.) In July, 1779, when the British under General Tryon raided New Haven, John Pierpont removed his young family to Hamden for safety, taking some valuables with them and burying others in the cellar. During the enemy's short stay in the town they occupied the house caring for some of their wounded there. Blood stains long remained as reminders of this occupation. Considerable damage was done to the furnishings. The portrait of Rev. James Pierpont had been removed to the College Buildings, but that of his wife, Mary Hooker, which had been left in the house, was pierced by bayonets.

According to an account printed in 1868, "With the Revolution came depreciation of property, which was never retrieved. Mr. Pierpont had a generous and kindly disposition, but was neither a money-making nor a money-keeping man; and as his property was mostly land, the family encountered many an hour of pecuniary anxiety and self denial."

Biographic Notes

- 127 Hendrickje Simons came from Noordthorn, Holland, and was probably related to Gerrijt Simons of Schenectady and John Simons of Hempstead.
- 126 Evert Duycking came to this country about 1638 from Borken, a village in North Brabant, Holland. He was in the service of the Dutch West India Co. and in 1640 was stationed at Fort Hope, near the present site of the City of Hartford, Conn. He and his wife became members of the Dutch Church in New York in 1649, residing at that time and for many years after on Hoogh Straat, now Stone Street, near William. Isaac Bedlow and Christopher Hooghland lived on either side of him. He took the oath of allegiance to the English in 1664, was appointed Fire Warden in 1674, and admitted as free-man of the City of New York in 1698.
- 122 Joris Jansen de Rapalie is supposed to have been a proscribed Huguenot from Rochelle. He came to this country with his wife in 1623, settling first in Fort Orange (now Albany, New York), then, in 1626, in New Amsterdam.
- 120 Cornelis Hooglandt appears as the first ferry man between New Amsterdam and Brooklyn as early as 1638.
- 61 Elizabeth de Rapalie was the younger sister of Sarah Rapalie who for so long was considered to be the first white child born in what is now New York State.
- 30 Adrian Hooglandt was murdered by one of his slaves in 1712.
- 14 James (Jacques) Renaudet was a Huguenot in Picardy, France. He fled from persecution to England where he was naturalized in 1701. Thence he came to New York. On September 10, 1714, he was married in New York to Belitje Hooglandt. Ten years later he moved with his family to Philadelphia. He had eight children. One of the sons was Dr. Peter Renaudet who lived in Bristol, England. He never married. He was very fond of his great niece ANNA MARIA CONSTABLE who had visited him with her mother when they were in England and he left her his plate, but this was lost at sea on its way to America.

- 6 Townsend White was born near Tenby, Wales. His family was prominent in that neighborhood. He came to America early in life, sailing from Bristol, and settled in Philadelphia where he became a well known merchant. He owned several sea-going vessels. He was a warden of Christ Church 1749-1750 and 1765-1766. He always used his crest and coat of arms and remained loyal to his king during the Revolution. ANNA MARIA CONSTABLE noted in 1842 that she had a perfect recollection of her grandfather; that he was beloved by all who knew him and that he was a pious and excellent man, but that he lived to such extreme old age (he died at the age of 87) he lost his faculties yet even then he was never known to be the least impatient. He died at the home of his daughter, Mrs William Edgar, whose house was on Wall Street next to that of her brother-in-law, William Kerin Constable.

Townsend White and Ann Renaudet had seven children of whom Anna White was the youngest. The others were, of course, aunts and uncles of ANNA MARIA CONSTABLE: Sarah, born May, 1745, married in 1768 Moore Furman a wealthy man who lived on his estate at Lamberton, New Jersey; Townsend, jr., born February, 1747, married a lady of St. Croix, West Indies; Anne, born April 3, 1749, died young; John, born July 30, 1750, who escorted his youngest sister and her family from Bristol to New York in 1795, died unmarried; Isabella, born June 26, 1753, married William Edgar a wealthy New York merchant and had five children. She had moved to Bermuda even before her father's death and died there of consumption in January, 1793; a second Anne, born July 15, 1757, died December, 1759.

- 5 Jane Kerin was a doughty Irish woman "of masculine understanding and great conversational powers" and, judging by her miniature, of considerable beauty and charm. She was born in Dublin and married Dr. John Constable about 1749. In February, 1750, she gave birth to a daughter called Eweretta, a name coined from her mother's family name, Ewer, but this child died very young. Two years later William Kerin Constable was born; then on April 22, 1753, Elizabeth Thomasine who also died young; and a year and a day after that, a second Eweretta. In 1757 Dr. Constable accompanied by his wife, little William and the baby moved to Montreal where the following year a son, George, was born - he also died young - and in 1761 a daughter, Harriet. In 1763 the family moved to Schenectady where Dr. Constable bought a house which remained in the family until sold by his grandson John Constable in 1851, and the next year James, the youngest of their children was born there.

Later the family moved to New York City. After Dr. Constable's death in 1785, his widow lived with her son William and his family in Great Dock Street and then at 32 Wall Street where she had two upper rooms, her own maid to attend her, "and never came down until dinner unless she chose it". In 1795 William bought and completely furnished a small house at the southeast corner of William and Pine and this he presented to his mother as a New Year's gift (his own birthday), 1796. Her son James lived with her in the new house and William and his family dined with her once a week.

In 1800 at the age of 69 she re-crossed the Atlantic - no light undertaking in those days - in order to see Eweretta and Harriet who lived in England. She returned, however, so as to be present at the wedding on January 21, 1802, of her granddaughter, ANNA MARIA CONSTABLE and HEZEKIAH BEERS PIERPONT, and then after only a short visit went back to England to see her daughters yet once again. In May, 1803, while she was abroad, her son William died in New York and she crossed the Atlantic for the fifth time, arriving in July. For a few months she stayed with the Pierponts where she was able to dote on nine months old William Constable Pierrepont (No 1, below), her great-grandson. Then she moved to Schenectady, whither her daughter-in-law, William's widow, had also moved. James again resided with her. On March 17, St. Patrick's Day, 1805, Anna Constable Pierrepont (No 2, below) was born in Brooklyn. Her great-grandmother could not come down from Schenectady and never saw the child but she made much of the fact that she had been blessed by the Patron Saint of Ireland. A few months later, on October 7, she died after only a week's illness, at the age of 74. Her daughter recorded that she had retained fully her memory and her faculties, that a month before her death she had made a shirt for James without spectacles, and, above all, that she had never lost a tooth - she "carried all her teeth sound to the grave".

Jane Kerin was the daughter of William Kerin of Dublin who had studied for the law, but being a man of property lived on his income. He lived to be 84. His wife, Jane Ewer, lived to be 85.

- 4 John Constable, who was born in Dublin, was a surgeon in the British army. He came to Montreal in 1753, then moved to Schenectady in 1763. There he was granted a commission as surgeon to the 1st Regiment in the pay of the Province of New York. Later he moved with his family to New York City where he purchased a house on Broad Street. He died in New York in 1785 and was buried in St. Paul's church yard. He was a small man with black eyes.

He was the son of William Constable of Dublin, Ireland, a wealthy man, and Elizabeth Owen who came from Wales. He had three sisters: one, Mary, married a Mr White, had no children, and left her property to William Kerin Constable. This was always referred to as "the Irish Estate". Of the other sisters, who never married, one lived to be 97, the other 99. They slept all day and sat up all night. William Constable's father was named, it is believed, Robert Constable.

ANNA MARIA CONSTABLE knew well her two aunts, Eweretta and Harriet Constable, and her uncle James Constable, children of Dr. John Constable and Jane Kerin.

Eweretta Constable was married when only 15 to James Phyn of London who was at the time an Indian trader in Schenectady associated with Colonel Sir William Johnson. Later he took his brother-in-law, William Kerin Constable, into partnership, but with the outbreak of the Revolution, he and Eweretta - Aunt Phyn, as she was called by her niece, - left for England on a pass issued by the New York State Committee of Public Safety. They were accompanied by James Constable, then 16 years old and a friend, Alexander Ellice. In England Phyn established the mercantile house of Phyn, Ellice and Inglis. ANNA observed that at 40 Aunt Phyn was the most beautiful woman she knew. The Phyns had four children: George, John, Jane, and Catherine. Jane Phyn married William Bell an English merchant (not to be confused with William Bell, New York merchant, bachelor, and close friend of William Kerin Constable). When he died in 1843, ANNA who "had felt all her life for him like a daughter" asked that he be buried "in her own family ground at Greenwood Cemetery". The Bells lived in Hastings, Kent, and had four daughters and two sons. George Phyn, Jane's brother, never married and lived with the Bells. Henry Evelyn Pierrepont (No 3, below) saw all the Bells - Jane was his mother's first cousin - when he was in England in 1833. John Phyn, the other brother, also never married. Catherine Phyn married a General Maisters and had three sons and five daughters.

Harriet Constable married Thomas Pierce of Bristol, England, and was known as Aunt Pierce to her niece. When a widow she lived at Clifton, near Bristol. There were four Pierce children: Hester, Charles, Jane, and Eweretta Constable Pierce, but only Jane married. Her husband was named Clarke. They lived in Dulverton, Devonshire, and had four children. William Kerin Constable, on his death, left $5,000 to his "sister Harriet (wife of my excellent friend T. Pierce of Bristol)" and three years later James Constable after requesting his executor "to procure and present rings or other Tokens of a similar Kind in remembrance of me to my dear sister Eweretta", to William's widow, and to each nephew and niece, directed that "the small property I leave" (other than a few specific items) go to his "dearly beloved sister Harriet". Aunt Pierce died in October, 1830.

James Constable was twelve years younger than his brother William. In England, he appears to have worked in his brother-in-law's firm. After the Treaty of Paris was signed in 1783, James wanted to return to New York, but William "advised him to remain for the present where he is. He is daily improving in a knowledge of business, & gaining a habit of industry." By early 1791 it had been agreed, however, that James should return to New York in June "to become a partner in the present house of Wm C & Co", but by the time he arrived William had determined to dissolve the copartnership with Robert Morris and Gouverneur Morris, and a new firm of William & James Constable was established. Their counting house was at 51 William Street. James managed the firm and the commercial transactions in which the brothers dealt while William went abroad to sell the lands in which he was speculating. James was a very conscientious individual, but by no means as shrewd as his brother. Nearly a decade after the firm was established he injudiciously endorsed large notes of Nathaniel J. Ingraham and bankrupted his house when Ingraham failed. William's affection for him never dimmed and two years later he designated James as one of his executors and also as a guardian of his children. James never married. After his return from England he resided most of the time with his mother to whom he was devoted. He died only two years after her at the age of 43.

- 3 Ann White was born in Philadelphia on July 4, 1762. She and William Kerin Constable were married there on February 28, 1782, two months before her twentieth birthday. She was a close friend of Miss Dandridge before the latter became Mrs Custis, and when the young widow married General Washington the friendship continued, especially as William was on cordial terms with the General.

Ann of course accompanied her husband to New York when he moved there three years after they were married and was chatelaine in the large establishments they had first in Great Dock Street (now Pearl Street) and then at 32 Wall Street. Soon after the Macomb purchase in 1791 William went to Europe to begin sales of the land he and his associates had acquired. When he found that he was going to be abroad longer than he had expected he sent for his family. They crossed in his ship "Eweretta", Captain Harvey, in 21 days which was considered a wonderful crossing. For about eighteen months they all lived in London in a large house near Bedford Square and here Harriet Constable was born on April 12, 1794. The Phyns (she was William's sister Eweretta) must have lived nearby as ANNA MARIA CONSTABLE recorded later that she "saw my beautiful aunt every day". Aunt Pierce, William's other sister, persuaded William to buy an "elegant country seat" at Wick, between Bath and Bristol, not far from where she lived, and the family were there until August, 1795. William had had to return to New York but it was considered inadvisable for his wife to accompany him as she was expecting another child. Emily Constable was born at Wick on July 4, 1795. Shortly thereafter the family moved to Bristol and stayed with Dr. Peter Renaudet, Ann White's uncle, who lived at the Hot Wells which had become fashionable early in the century.

William sent a vessel from New York to bring his family home and his brother-in-law, John White, to act as their escort. The passage back was very different from the crossing to Europe - 49 days of almost continuous storm. The deadlights - porthole shutters - were almost always in. If ANNA tried to play the piano, either the captain or her uncle John had to steady her on the bench. ANNA recorded that she was never sick, but that her mother never left her berth. A coachman, a groom, a footman, a butler, Ann's personal maid, a nurse, and a maid comprised "the suite of servants" that accompanied the family on the voyage. In addition, they had on board "4 splendid horses for the Chariot...besides 'Potatoes' the famous horse my Father imported". Off the American coast a man was lost from the mast head in a snow storm, and Ann sat up in her berth and cut and filled flannel mittens for the men. It was November when they reached New York. ANNA was impressed with how small the streets were; Ann was alarmed to hear of the depredations from Yellow Fever.

After William's death in 1803, Ann settled in Schenectady, but she often visited her various children and carried on a loving correspondence with them. She appears to have been a very sweet and gentle person and ANNA was therefore particularly distressed some years later at the unhappiness she unintentionally caused her mother. She had arranged to send her youngest sister, Matilda - Matty - Constable, to Mrs Brewton's boarding school in New York where she stayed for several years. Matty loved the school and adored Mrs Brewton. ANNA suddenly became conscious that "My dear gentle mother's heart is pained by her almost desertion and giving such a large share of love to Mrs B. whom she calls Mother". Mrs Brewton reciprocated Matty's feelings and presently even suggested adopting her - a suggestion which "deeply agitated" Ann. Was it, possibly, to compensate in part for this that ANNA later sent her own daughter, Caroline Theresa Pierrepont (No 3, below) to live with her grandmother in Schenectady where, alas, she died at the age of 16?

The most exciting event of Ann's later years was the visit of General Lafayette. Hearing that the widow of his "dear friend and companion in arms" was living and at her daughter's residence on the Brooklyn Heights, he crossed the river on July 12, 1825 to pay his respects. ANNA fortunately returned with her son Henry (No 4, below) that morning from a visit to William (No 1, below) at Pierrepont Manor, and was able to share in the excitement. The visit made a deep impression on her and on all the family and has always been a cherished memory, although Henry, in the blasé manner of 16, covered the event in his diary with: "Grandma, Anna & Miss J Sands at home preparing for a visit from Gen^l Lafayette, who came at 4½ oclock with Gen^l Fish and staid ¼ of an hour."

Ann was staying with her daughter Emily and her husband, Dr. Samuel W. Moore at their home on Warren Street in New York City when after a long illness she died quietly in her sleep November 2, 1826.

- 2 William Kerin Constable - he dropped the "Kerin" from his name - was born in Dublin, Ireland, about 1 a.m. New Year's day, 1752. He was taken to Montreal by his family when he was five and to Schenectady when he was eleven. Then he was sent back to Dublin to be educated in care of his aunt Mrs White who years later bequeathed him her property, known in the family as "the Irish estate". He graduated from Trinity College and returned to Schenectady. His sister Eweretta had married in 1769 or 1770 when she was only fifteen, James Phyn who was associated with Colonel Sir William Johnson in the Indian trade, and William's first business relationship was a partnership with his brother-in-law. At the outbreak of the Revolution the Phyns went to England under a pass from the Committee of Safety of New York taking James Constable with them. William entered the Revolutionary army. In 1781 he was Aide de Camp to General Lafayette and had the rank of major. He maintained a friendly correspondence with Lafayette throughout his life.

Soon thereafter William established himself in Philadelphia, then the principal commercial center of the country, in partnership with James Seagrove in Charleston and had a large trade with the West Indies. On a trip to Havana in 1783 he contracted yellow fever and nearly died. With the coming of peace he decided to move to New York although he did not care for what he had seen there. Business was at a standstill and "the necessities of life dear - wood particularly £12 ($30) per cord - and political animosities disturbing every society.. ..Notwithstanding the unpromising condition of things at present, I am convinced it will be one of the first ports in America and under that conviction will remove there in April". This he did "closing the old concern of Seagrove & Constable" and establishing in New York a new partnership with Robert Morris, who continued to reside in Philadelphia, and Gouverneur Morris, under the firm name of William Constable & Co. (later, for a short period, Constable, Rucker & Co.), the two Morrises putting in as their share £50,000.

The new firm which was extremely prosperous speculated in the government and state debts; it also increasingly furnished supplies to Europe and engaged in the carrying trade. The Morrises had already, in February 1784, sent the first American vessel, the 360-ton "Empress of China", to Canton with 40 tons of ginseng as cargo. Major Samuel Shaw was supercargo. In 1786 the new firm sent the "Empress of China" on a second voyage and, two years later, the "America". The firm had her built expressly for the India and China trade. William wrote of her: "A most excellent Ship is now laid down of 600 tons built of live oak & cedar, 3 decks, and will be launched in October. She will cost about £7000 stg to sea, and will be the finest vessel ever built here." William Bell, who became a life long family friend and the only non-member of the Pierrepont family to be buried in "Lawn Girt", the family burial ground at Greenwood Cemetery, was supercargo on both these voyages.

The war in Europe raised the price of wheat in this country to sixteen and twenty shillings per bushel. In June, 1790, William acquired the confiscated estate of Philipse Manor at Yonkers - 320 acres nineteen miles from New York. "The mill was good for nothing," he wrote Gouverneur Morris in Paris, "& I have pulled it down, and propose erecting another of stone under the direction of Hall (Jno) who says the stream is equal to running two run of stones all the year round, and four at particular seasons." The new mill flourished. About 1796 he sold Philipse Manor for $65,000.

At least as early as 1787 William had begun to speculate in western lands in Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia, Georgia and in the military tract in New York state. On January 4, 1788 he wrote Lafayette: "The new constitution is the sole object of our attention. Hamilton has written in defense of it under the signature of Publius. As soon as the work is printed I shall send you a copy of it. The emigration to the Western Country is beyond belief. Should the new Govt make any trouble a very great number of the yeomanry of the Coast will retire to the banks of the Ohio & the Mississippi. A very large tract of land is now selling by the State of New-York on the banks of the St. Lawrence. If any persons in France should be disposed to become proprietors it would be the most eligible. Should you or your friends have any idea of the kind, I can put them in the way to make the purchase at about 16 Sols Tournois per acre, all the expenses of survey included, & perhaps for less."

A month later he wrote a friend: "The new form of Government will be adopted, I trust. If not a Civil War must ensue. Give us peace in our day, O Lord, is my prayer. If commotions should take place I am almost too old to be concerned. /He was 36 1/2/. I must therefore look out and should troubles actually take place, I mean to go to the Ohio, where a number of us this year have taken up a quantity of land at the mouth of the Muskingham, and shall commence making a settlement immediately. 100 men have just now taken up their march, and we supply them with provisions for six months.... These lands are now about 8d N.Y. currency per acre or one dollar to settlers. I have an original interest of 7,500 ac. and a right to a further share in the Patent."

Two years later he was "concerned in a sale of 1/2 a million of land on the Scioto 300,00 Ac. of which is already disposed of at 3 livres and hand and 3 more payable in 2 yrs pr acre. If nothing sinister happens and our agents act with us honestly and the sales can be completed, I shall clear $10,000 by the business."

One of William's close friends was Alexander Macomb with whom he had been acquainted since boyhood. Through him William became interested in New York state lands first acquiring Potsdam, Madrid and half of Stockholm and Louisville - some 191,000 acres. Then with Macomb he contracted to buy 300,000 acres in the Genessee country, but he sold this contract before the patent was taken out. Now in 1791 came an opportunity which he described as "a great Spec". The State had offered to sell all unpatented lands south and west of the Mohawk at 2 shillings cash per acre plus 4 shillings payable in seven annual installments. Constable estimated "the quantity in that quarter is about 1 million. They have 4 millions to the northward from Oswego to the 45th degree along the St. Lawrence, with a front on the water of upwards of 100 miles ungranted, which might be purchased this moment for 6d stg or less. A great quantity of which on the St. Lawrence and Lake Champlain /Ontario ?/ is excellent." There followed the famous Macomb Purchase under which Macomb, William, and another friend, Daniel McCormick, agreed to buy from the State these 4,000,000 acres to be patented in six tracts, at eight pence per acre to be paid in installments over six years. (Surveys presently determined that the acreage involved was a little under 3,700,000. With interest on the installments the total amount paid was $344,493.77.) And even while working on this scheme William became one of a company "making proposals to the Legislature of Massachusetts for a million acres of land on the Penobscot, which we shall get at or under 1/ pr ac".

Meanwhile the partnership arrangements with the Morris was about to expire. Gouverneur Morris signified he had no objection to being admitted "'in case the connection should be renewed'", but Robert Morris was financially embarrassed and William was reluctant. "My own wish certainly would be not to renew the Copartnership as I am well convinced that with the countenance and confidence of our friends, we should do better than we can by being united with those gentlemen.... Observe if I renew the Copartnership I shall make a reservation to do such business either in the lands or funds of America for my own account as I may be able to accomplish by my own means without interfering with the concerns or cash of the Co. Messrs Morris have done the same hitherto and I see no reasonable objection to my having the like liberty." But he would reach no final decision until he could talk with his brother James who was on his way from England "to become a partner in the present house of William Constable & Co."

James arrived in June 1791. The copartnership was not renewed. Instead a new partnership was established by the two brothers under the name of Wm & Jas Constable; James taking charge of the commercial aspects of the business while William departed for England to begin the sale of the New York lands which had just been purchased. In this he was highly successful, selling tracts nos. 4, 5, and 6 at prices ranging from 25 to 40 cents an acre. On his return to New York in 1795 he tried not only to make roads to give access to the northern lands, but he also took an active interest in the Inland Lock Navigation Company which succeeded in getting cargoes in boats of ten tons through from the Hudson to Lake Oneida and thence to Lake Ontario with only one portage.

One of the difficulties of dealing in 'wild lands' was the lack of detailed knowledge. One important tract which William sold as having 400,000 acres "more or less" turned out when surveyed to contain nearly 820,000 acres. William repurchased the tract for an advance of 160,000. Later he sold 305,000 acres at one dollar an acre, retaining the balance for himself. This he subdivided into 18 townships. Some of these he sold, but two of them he determined to have settled and contracted to this end with Nathaniel Shaler. Subject to that contract and to payment of a bond to Daniel McCormick, William deeded his remaining interest in these townships to his son William who in 1809 settled there at Constableville. In his efforts to sell tracts nos. 1, 2, and 3 and the other areas he still owned along the St. Lawrence, William was handicapped by the St. Regis Indians who, instigated by the British, drove off the surveyors and ceased their depredations only after the Jay treaty became effective. He was also handicapped by his insistence on the down payment in cash of one quarter the purchase price at a time when money was scarce and land speculation was rampant.

Meanwhile his commercial activities continued. Among his successful ventures were the shipment, in association with Colonel Jeremiah Wadsworth of Hartford and Joseph Howland of New London, of 78 cargoes of cattle to the West Indies for the British army and navy. In some of his other ventures he suffered from French spoliation.

In 1798 he again went to Europe to try to sell tracts nos. 1, 2, and 3 of the Macomb purchase, but the war and general distress had greatly reduced popular interest in such land speculation. While he made some sales - among other purchasers was Necker - they were not extensive. It was while he was in Paris on this business that he became acquainted with HEZEKIAH BEERS PIERPONT who was to become his son-in-law.

About the turn of the century James unfortunately endorsed notes of Nathaniel J. Ingraham to the extent of $300,000. Ingraham's failure brought down the house of Wm & Jas Constable which was unable to meet all these notes when demanded. Immediately on learning of this William returned to New York in the spring of 1801. He was held for a short time in the old debtor's prison in City Hall Park (later the Register's office, now torn down). He assigned much of his landed interest to his creditors and ultimately discharged all claims.

William's first New York residence was in Great Dock Street (now Pearl Street). In addition to his immediate family, his mother lived here after Dr. Constable's death and both his partners, Robert Morris and Gouverneur Morris, had their sleeping apartments "appropriated to them when they came to New York. In 1791 he purchased from Daniel Ludlow the "large elegant Mansion" at 32 Wall Street which had been built by Mr Marston with brick brought from Holland and mortar mixed with buttermilk. On the ground floor were a large dining room, a small parlor with a tapestry representing The Chase, a marble mantle, and stuccoed ceiling, William's own study, and a large servants' hall and pantries leading through a long covered porch to the kitchen. This service wing ran up William Street; above it were servants' rooms. Upstairs, facing Wall Street, was a large drawing room, and on the same floor the master bedroom, a spare room, and the nursery. There were six rooms on the top floor, two of them occupied by his mother. In 1797 William sold 32 Wall Street to the newly organized Bank of New York for £11,000 New York currency and bought the Rufus King house at 223 Broadway, later acquired by John Jacob Astor and part of the site of the old Astor House. Aaron Burr lived next door at 221 and Walter Rutherford, whose granddaughter married William's grandson, Henry Evelyn Pierrepont (No 3, below), lived at 219.

In addition to having his profitable flour mill there, William utilized Philipse Manor as a country seat. When he sold that estate he bought another country place, this time on the Hudson River at Bloomingdale, only six miles from New York - now 86th Street and the River. After his failure this was sold to John McVickar and William rented Governor Clinton's house which stood on the banks of the Hudson at Ninth Avenue and Gainsvoort Street near Greenwich Village. ANNA MARIA CONSTABLE was married here, William Constable died here, and William Pierrepont Constable (No 1, below) was born here.

In 1796, at the request of his mother, William went to Philadelphia and engaged Gilbert Stuart to paint a portrait of General Washington. Stuart at the time was painting a full length portrait of the President for Mr Bingham (who presented it to the Marquis of Lansdowne) and Stuart, who was well acquainted with William, promised that he would work on both pictures alternately so that both should be originals of Washington who was sitting for his likeness. Twice William went from New York to Philadelphia in his chariot and four, taking with him his friend Daniel McCormick - who was also a friend of Stuart - to watch the progress of the painting and expedite the work, Stuart being notoriously dilatory. Before the finished portrait, which was 8' by 5', was sent to New York, Stuart painted a half-length from it which William presented to his friend General Hamilton. William paid Stuart $500 for the full length portrait and $250 for the half length.

William had great charm and was noted as an unusually fine conversationalist. He was said to resemble General Washington, his height and bearing being the same, and his hair being dressed in the same manner. While he was living in Philadelphia he became President of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick and a member of the City Troop. On July 4, 1796 he was elected an honorary member of the New York State Society of the Cincinnati.

On his death two years after his return from England his estate, exclusive of wild lands, was valued "with the aid of Daniel McCormick and Alexander Macomb Creditor Appraisers" at $39,260.99. Bad and doubtful debts totalled an additional $114,000 of which the principal item was $90,000 owed by Ingraham. (On the other debts $3,400 was ultimately recovered.)

His will contained a clause unusually liberal in a day when a husband owned his wife's property: "To each of my daughters I give the yearly sum of one hundred and fifty dollars to be paid to them after they shall have arrived at the age of fourteen years until they shall have arrived at the age of twenty one years old to be used by them for their own purposes without any control or restraint of their Guardians." Among the specific bequests were: "To my friend General Alexander Hamilton I give all my French books as a mark of my sincere esteem and regard"; "To my son William I give my full length portrait of General Washington" (not, curiously, included in the inventory); "To my dear wife Ann all my household furniture, plate, slaves he left three - Ned, the Boy aged about 13, appraised at $250, Rose, the Cook about 24, valued at $175, and "Cuff, Labourer, Husband to the Cook - to serve till 13 April, 1805, $75"/, carriages and horses" and $3,000 a year.

The will was dated January 25, 1803. On March 1 he added a memorandum which began: "Dr. Jay hav^g denounced me I finished my will with some precipitation but as I am not yet gone I shall make some observations on it w^h I mean to have digested into form. I left Mrs. C. all my Carriages and horses. My breeding mares Chariot &c can only be an encumbrance. Let them be sold for the benefit of the Estate, and let her have the New Coach with the black horses and harness compleat".

William Constable died May 22, 1803.

HEZEKIAH BEERS PIERPONT

ANNA MARIA CONSTABLE

Hezekiah Beers Pierpont was born at New Haven, Connecticut, November 3, 1768. At an early age he went to work for his uncle Isaac Beers who imported books and ran a book store. In 1790, when he was 22, he left New Haven and became a clerk in the Customs House in New York City. A year later he went to Philadelphia as agent for Messrs. Watson & Greenleaf, and while there he made a small fortune through purchases of the government debt. In 1793 he formed a partnership with a cousin on his mother's side, William Leffingwell, and established in New York City the commercial house of Leffingwell & Pierpont.

This firm did a large and profitable business shipping provisions to France where economic conditions arising from the Revolution compelled the import of many necessities. He went to France to attend personally to these shipments and resided in Paris while the Terror was at its height. Once he was caught in a crowd and became an involuntary witness to the beheading of Robespierre in July, 1794.

The danger, however, of seizure by England - then at war with France - of American ships carrying supplies of food to the French and of seizure by France of vessels bound for England became so serious that the firm soon thereafter abandoned the trade with France and essayed the eastern trade. In 1795 Hezekiah went as supercargo on their ship Confederacy to India and China. On the way back Confederacy with a valuable cargo was taken off the coast of France early in June 1797 by a French privateer and taken into Nantes where she was sold for the equivalent of $330,000 in American money.

Hexekiah remained abroad until 1800 concentrating on matters of insurance (In 1799 on one of his visits to England he was taken into custody on suspicion of unlawful correspondence with France, but "the most satisfactory explanation was given of the whole of that Gentleman's conduct and every cause of suspicion entirely removed".) and in pressing the claim of his firm on account of the seizure of their ship.

In 1800 a Convention was concluded between the United States and France, which, as promulgated in December 1801, was interpreted as terminating all American claims against France on account of French seizures of ships and cargoes prior to 1800, said to number about 600, in exchange for the termination of French claims against the American Government arising from the alleged non-observance by the United States of the treaty of 1788 and from the abrogation by Congress of the treaty of alliance of 1778. The American clamants very naturally maintained that their private claims had been taken for a public use and that they were entitled to just compensation from the United States government. As early as February 1802 memorials were presented to Congress claiming such compensation, but it was not until 1891 - 94 years after the seizure of Confederacy - that the United States honored its obligation. The amount paid on account of Confederacy was $160,478.19, or less than half the principal claim - and with no interest.

It was while he was thus engaged abroad that Hezekiah came to know William Kerin Constable one of the principal American merchants at the time, who had come abroad to seek purchasers for New York state lands included in the Macomb purchase of which he was part owner. He also became a friend of Robert Fulton and on his return aided him with his advice and influence in the establishment of the Fulton Ferry between New York and Brooklyn. Later he named his third son for him.

The firm of Leffingwell & Pierpont was dissolved in 1800 and Hezekiah reached the conclusion that foreign commerce under then existing conditions was too hazardous. He made a journey through New England to study possible alternatives and determined that a distillery would be lucrative. He thereupon, probably in 1801, purchased the brewery belonging to Philip Livingston at the foot of Joralemon Street, Brooklyn, which had been burned during the Revolution, and engaged Col. James Anderson of Connecticut to handle the technical aspects of its establishment. From the beginning this venture - it was the only distillery in New York - was extremely successful. He was, however, for some years preoccupied with its expansion and with securing a constant supply of corn and rye. His brother, John Pierpont, often helped him when shortages developed seeking corn as far afield as New Haven or Hudson. During one period he contracted for a stated quantity from Matthew Vassar the Poughkeepsie brewer. Not only was Hezekiah able over the next few years to raise the price per pipe of gin almost regularly, but he also developed sales far beyond the local market, shipping quite steadily to Philadelphia and presently to New Orleans. Finally several cargoes were shipped even to India.

In 1802 Hezekiah Beers Pierpont married Anna Maria Constable, daughter of William Kerin Constable whom he had met in Paris. Constable had failed in 1800 and was no longer one of the richest men in the United States, but he was out of debt and he was still a dramatic figure. He died a year after their marriage and Hezekiah was named one of his executors.

Despite the assignments which had been made to creditors, his estate still contained thousands of acres of wild lands in New York state and as executor Hezekiah and James Constable, William's brother, also an executor, journeyed the summer of 1803 and each summer thereafter through these lands. Those were arduous trips on horseback which presently, with James' death in 1807, Hezekiah carried on each year alone.

He became increasingly interested in upstate lands and became himself an investor feeling that they offered not only an excellent source of timber, but also, via the projected Erie Canal and the Hudson River, of garden produce for the expanding New York City market. Although for many years he continued to participate in trading ventures on various ships, sometimes losing but generally making a good profit, in 1819 he sold the distillery - which became a spermaceti factory - in order that he might concentrate his energies on the development of his upstate lands and of property he had acquired in Brooklyn.

In 1806 he had purchased the town of Pierrepont. Subsequently he bought Lewisville and Stockholm. Later he acquired with the approval of the heirs the balance of the Constable estate holdings. Ultimately he owned about half a million acres, but unlike Constable he viewed these as a long range investment rather than a speculation. Each summer he regularly visited his lands. As his two older sons grew up they accompanied him on these journeys. In addition to French and Spanish and the usual courses to be had at the school run by the French emigré Louis Bancel, he had his two sons especially trained in surveying and draftsmanship. Ultimately he gave the management of the lands in Oswego and Jefferson counties to William /No 1, below/ who settled at Pierrepont Manor in 1822, and of the lands in Lewis, St. Lawrence and Franklin counties to Henry /No 4, below/.

The procedure followed by Hezekiah in seeking the sale of his land seems worth recording. He appointed local agents empowered to enter into verbal contracts for the sale to individuals who would actually settle and improve the land they agreed to purchase of small areas suitable for farms. During each annual summer tour he entered into written contracts, payable in three or four years with interest, with those who had made verbal purchase contracts with his agents since his preceding visit. Those who already held written contracts had the amounts of payments made endorsed on their contracts. Occasionally payments were in stock, grain, or market produce, or apparently in labor on the roads and bridges which Hezekiah was constantly having constructed to open up the country. If all the consideration had not been paid at the expiration of a written contract, that contract was surrendered and a new contract drawn up in the amount of the purchase price still due, "and said contracts were in like manner surrendered and renewed at the end of every three or four years, until the whole consideration and interest were paid". When finally a purchaser had thus in small annual sums paid the principal and interest stipulated in the original contract a deed to the land was given the purchaser. Hezekiah always considered that after a purchaser had entered the land, had it surveyed and the boundaries marked, and had signed a written contract, the land was his - the contract serving as Hezekiah's security for the purchase money in lieu of a mortgage, and as the purchaser's claim for a deed as soon as payment of principal and interest was completed. Many of the annual payments were very small indeed. Some of the written contracts which had been entered into as early as 1805 had not been fully paid by 1852!

January 21, 1802 was a rainy, stormy day. That afternoon Bishop Provost married Hezekiah and Anna in the drawing room of Governor Clinton's house on the banks of the North River where William Constable was then living. "There were 6 Brides maids & grooms men" and after the ceremony many friends and neighbors came by invitation. The bride was 18. She had been born in Philadelphia on March 10, 1783, but was brought up in New York whither her family had moved soon thereafter.

When she was seven William Bell, who went many times to China as supercargo of her father's ships, brought her a set of china with her name on it "and well can I remember our noble guests, Gouverneur Morris & Robert Morris the financier coming to my tea party and drinking tea from them".

At nine she accompanied her mother to England whither her father had gone on business. They stayed three years. Her sister Emily was born there July 4, 1795. The following month she spent in Bristol with her great-uncle, Dr. Peter Renaudet, "who let me do as I liked and rummage among his great collection of curiosities of every kind. He never tired of giving me information in natural history and explaining anything I wished to know....His house at the Hot Wells was the resort of all the literary people who thronged to the Baths. I very often saw Hannah More, Amos Cotile, Southey, and various others. Ann Yearsley* the milk woman who wrote novels I well recollect." Anna corresponded with her great-uncle until his death in 1804. In his will he divided his personal property principally among Anna and her brothers and sisters, but unfortunately this was lost at sea en route to America when the Jupiter sank among the icebergs of the North Atlantic.

* Cotile's name does not appear in the Encyclopedia Britannica, but Hannah More is said to have "discovered a poetess in Mrs Ann Yearsley (1756-1806), a milk woman, and raised a considerable sum for her benefit. "Lactilla", as Mrs Yearsley was called, wished to receive the capital, and made insinuations against Miss More, who desired to hold it in trust. The trust was handed over to a Bristol merchant and eventually to the poetess."

Four years after her return to New York, Anna, then sixteen, put on a black silk frock. "It was the first time I was ever allowed to wear mourning. My father had an antipathy to black," but on the occasion of General Washington's funeral "all who could put it on.... As I looked at the solemn procession, the boots, sword and hat on the coffin, and the band with muffled drums playing Roslin Castle, I wept in sympathy with my mother." It may be added parenthetically that Hezekiah also disapproved mourning and would not permit his family to put on black when his mother died.

Anna was the eldest of nine brothers and sisters and throughout her life she not only helped look after them but she also became almost a mother to Emily and Matilda the two youngest. She was just seventeen when her father, for whom all her life she carried a passionately devoted memory, failed. Of herself as a bride, she wrote that she was "almost an idol at home and, having been till within a few months considered as possessing a very large fortune, courted, admired, and made much of by a large circle of the then first people in the City of N.Y." She had "already refused 6 offers," yet she had "a warm glowing heart unspoilt by flattery and indulgence and the greatest pleasure of her life /was/ to do kindnesses and to see those she loved happy."

The young couple settled at 62 Greenwich Street, but the following year because of the prevalence of yellow fever returned to Governor Clinton's house and there on October 3, 1803 - six months after William Constable's death - their first child was born. Hezekiah had decided that the family should resume the old spelling of their surname, but his signature was too well established for him to change it. However, when the child was born he and Anna named him William Constable Pierrepont, instead of Pierpont. Indeed the family name became Pierrepont and all subsequent children used the same spelling, the streets and towns they established were spelled Pierrepont, and some twenty years later Anna began to sign herself Anna M. Pierrepont and to address her letters to H.B. or Hez. B. Pierrepont although he still signed himself Hez. B. Pierpont.

In the spring of 1804, Hezekiah purchased at public vendue at the Tontine Coffee House in New York the farm belonging to Robert Benson on the Brooklyn Heights a short - and steep - walk to the north of his distillery. The price was £7,700 - $2,000 payable on or before May 1, 1805 and $14,000 on or before May 1, 1810. The land, comprising about twenty acres, was a wedge-shaped sliver running from the East River to "the road leading to the village of Brooklyn". Its greatest width was in the west where it had a shore front of 434 feet. Its depth was two hundred feet short of half a mile.

The farm house was located on the heights overlooking the harbor. It had been built before the Revolution, probably in 1770 and quite possibly by John Cornell, jr., on eight acres of land. It was still a small, simple shingled building when on August 29, 1776, it served as headquarters for General Washington after the Battle of Long Island. Years later, Colonel Fish who accompanied General Lafayette on a visit to William Constable's widow who was staying at her daughter's in the old house and who had been with General Washington at the time, told many anecdotes of the battle and pointed out that the order to retreat across the East River had been given in the front room - which later became the Hall.

(When the house was torn down in 1846, Henry Evelyn Pierrepont /No 4, below/, who was present as a boy of 16 when Colonel Fish described the giving of the order to retreat, had the panel which constituted the center ornament of the fireplace in that room (Hall) removed and preserved. Eight-three years later his daughter, Julia Jay Pierrepont /No 45, below/, gave the panel to her niece, Ellen Low Pierrepont /No 422/, who incorporated it in her living room mantle in the house she was building in Bernardsville, N.J. When that house was sold after her death in 1960, the purchaser kindly removed the panel and gave it to her son, Abbot Low Moffat /No 4223/, who plans to place it in a fireplace in the house he is about to build in Princeton, N.J.)

At some time the property passed from John, jr., to Isaac Cornell, who with his wife sold it on August 8, 1787 to George Powers. Powers had, the preceding year, bought some twelve acres inland of the Cornell farm. He presently sold the twenty acres he now held to a Mr Arden, who added two octagonal wings to the Cornell farm house and in 1802 sold the farm to Robert Benson.

Seven months after acquiring the Benson farm, Hezekiah secured a grant from the City of New York of the land lying between high and low water in front of his new property "yielding, rendering and paying therefore.... yearly and every year....Twenty Seven Dollars and twelve and an half Cents lawful money" until May 1, 1844, and thereafter $54.25.

The next few years were years of development and expansion of the distillery - erecting a wind mill, digging a well, constructing store houses, and finally building a dock. But while his primary interest was the distillery and the Benson property was acquired because of its location close by, it was a farm and Hezekiah had to get the cow shed repaired and a pigstye built. Within a few years, however, he gave up pigs and while he always had a cow the milk shed - "Arden's folly" - was taken down in 1808 and the old barn in 1809. His real loves were his fruit and vegetable gardens. He and Anna also loved trees and they planted Lombardy poplars on the bank and an orchard with many varieties of peach trees. Some years later Anna "mourned over the cutting down of our two noble willow trees today, tho their nearness to the house was very inconvenient on many accounts." A large vegetable garden was laid out to the south of the house, bounded by neat hedges and rows meticulously spaced and labelled. Hezekiah's diary records each type of peach; and how many rows of what vegetables were planted in the garden. A detailed map of the garden for 1821 is extant with many of the plots labelled.

Improvements were made also to the house. An open piazza along the river side of the house was built in 1806. In 1808 the house was clapboarded over the old shingles. Two years later the kitchen hearth was paved. The south wing was added in 1822. The interior walls of the house were tinted with water paints almost every year.

Anna found the Brooklyn Heights a difficult site at first. From the beginning the "mosquitoes" were and continued always to be a severe trial - sometimes indeed they were unbearable both outdoors and in. She also noted several times how she disliked the musty smell that came apparently from the earthen cellar. And it was cold! The bedroom faced east, back of the Hall. There in winter the water would freeze in the pitchers. When they would arise - and the usual rising hour was 5 or 6 - they might find the temperature outside to be 13° and only two degrees warmer in the Hall! Not until 1813 were "Russian stoves" installed in all the rooms including the nursery and also in Hezekiah's office which was a small separate building. But even with these stoves the house would not have been considered comfortable by modern standards. February 15, 1817: "Tonight mercury 5 below zero!! My ink froze in the pen as I wrote dear Mother."

But despite the rigors Anna came to love her life on the Heights. She and Hezekiah were devoted and they had wonderful times together taking the gig for drives through Bedford Woods or to Flatbush or New Utrecht or "a charming drive of 16 miles with my Dear P to Meads Mills opposite Barren Island", or driving to Bloomingdale to see the John McVickars, who had bought William Constable's place there, or even to Morrisania and back to call on Gouverneur Morris. New York was not far away and one rowed over frequently and could come back by ferry or by "small boat". Many crossings were made in order to take hot baths which could be had in New York. A Brooklyn ordinance provided - "no person is permitted to bathe between sun-rise and sun-set, in any of the waters of the East River, between the foot of Jay street and Pierpont's distillery, under forfeiture of $5." But this ordinance did not prevent the Pierponts from bathing frequently in the river, both by day and by night when the weather was hot.

For several years, beginning some years after their marriage, Anna suffered ill health and though she strove as best she could to conceal the fact from her husband she was physically wretched during much of the time. Perhaps from the same cause, whatever it may have been, her son Robert Fulton /No 8, below/was ailing from birth till the day seven months later the guns booming for the launching of the Frigate Robert Fulton sounded also for his funeral. In 1815 and again the following year she had late miscarriages.

In July 1817 Hezekiah took her on a vacation which he hoped would help her. It apparently did her a world of good. She relished his companionship and was deeply interested in all she saw. They started from New Haven driving the first day to Hartford (on this day's drive they "persuaded our friend Chancellor Kent to take a seat in our carriage"). The next day they drove to North Hampton (at South Hadley "saw two oxen whose weight was 6000 lb"). They by way of Brattleboro they moved through the Green Mountains to Wilmington, and the following day went to Williamstown which "has a pretty church, two colleges and several handsome houses". They stayed two days at Lebanon Springs as Hezekiah did not feel well ("The change of water affects him"), then drove to Pittsfield and the following morning to Stockbridge, where they "rose very early & took a lovely refreshing drive through Great Barrington & breakfasted at Sheffield....We had a rough drive through Canaan, a sterile country the only object of interest was the Bloomery where all the large Anchors for our Frigates are made....arrived at Litchfield at 7." Thence, "the chestnut trees loaded with blossoms", they drove to Waterbury where they had "a miserable night plenty of nocturnal peace destroyers - and besides a Rat in the room. Set off at 5 for New Haven".

From about this period her health seems to have recovered and she easily threw off the effects of various falls on the ice or from the carriage. (The modern generation is apt not to realize that carriage accidents were frequent, often serious, and sometimes fatal.)

Perhaps in part because of ill health, Anna strongly disliked parties and refused whenever possible to go. Occasionally Hezekiah insisted, as on the occasion of the Ball to commemorate Peace which was held on February 22, 1815. "At nine I accompanied my husband and entered the assembly room which for 11 years I had never seen. I was so much made of and noticed from my having been so long out of the world that I can imagine a vain person easily enticed back into the world but give me Home and home pleasures." Her greatest joy was to sit with Hezekiah in the evenings reading aloud. Her greatest trial was the annual journey her husband took through the northern lands.

During each absence she dutifully tried to run the farm and the distillery and she recorded minutely everything that happened in his absence; what she did and what each servant or hired hand or the slave Lubin did, or more generally did not do, to her satisfaction. The Mansion, as the house came to be called, was fairly isolated and more than once she and her daughters slept with pistols ready. Indeed in 1810 she "fired off two balled pistols" but whether for practice or for more serious purpose is not clear. But above all she missed Hezekiah - her dear P.

But when he came home and they could have an evening alone, what pleasure! "P and self enjoyed a delightful evening by ourselves. We walked round the garden after 12. Twas a lovely night and all the world but ourselves seemed asleep. What a paradise we have."

Anna loved the Mansion. The site was superb, and the house itself began to emerge as a distinguished residence. No one in New York had seemed to take the war of 1812 seriously until suddenly late in July 1814 there were reports that "part of Wellington's army are on their way here." Six weeks later Anna noted in her diary: "We heard yesterday that Washington had been burnt by the British - a great stain on the commander of the deed, but not on the nation; surely such a thing was not premeditated. All seems bustle and talk about the times. What at first was almost a frolic begins to wear a more serious aspect. Our truly lovely situation never looked more lovely than at this moment. Could we see into futurity perhaps the prospect would be one of suffering and deprivation. In these precarious times we know not what even a day may bring forth.

"I often wish I could sketch a view of our house and the surrounding beauties, so much combined in so small a space. The time may be at hand when what has been, may almost seem an illusion. Few individuals would be more exposed in many points than we. Such a large property defenceless and (should the British be enabled to enter our waters) so placed in the most exposed situation for destruction. But while it may be prudent to reflect on what may occur it would be most ungrateful in me to embitter the present with gloomy fears. Should a reverse be in store for me may I soften the bitterness of it by a Christian remembrance of the innumerable blessings showered upon me and mine for 12 years and in practise show that my professions have not been without foundations."

Frantic efforts for the protection of New York were undertaken. Forts were built on Staten Island and on Brooklyn Heights. (A visit to the Forts became a favorite Sunday walk and a sight one showed one's visitors.) Hezekiah let all his men in the distillery and on the farm go to work on the fortifications on a given day but, alas, the Irish of and the whiskey in Pat McCloskey, his foreman, rose above the occasion. There was a glorious fight between the Irish and the other workers at the fort, and Hezekiah had to go bail for Pat.

Six months later tidings of peace arrived the night of February 11, 1815. There was universal rejoicing. On the 21st Hezekiah "illuminated the house with 100 candles 7 till near 10".

Pat McCloskey was with Hezekiah for forty years, but this was exceptional. For some reason the Pierponts seem always to have had trouble keeping servants or men on the place. There are all too many entries such as "James so tipsy as not to be able to attend supper". Wages for a housemaid ran about $5 a month; for a cook $8 with the promise of $9 if she proved satisfactory. In later years this rose to $11 or $12.

In 1813 Hezekiah, after a fortnight's trial, bought for $250 a black boy named Lubin about fifteen years of age. Under the terms of the purchase Lubin was to be manumitted in 1824. Lubin proved just as difficult as the servants, drinking and staying out late when Hezekiah was away and having "an intimate and illicit connection" with one of the maids. Finally in 1818, Hezekiah decided he could not keep him at the Mansion for another six years and sent him to "Capt. Macy of Ship Edward for India".

The portrait of President Washington which William Constable had commissioned Gilbert Stuart to paint had not, for security reasons, been moved from 223 Broadway when the Constables rented Governor Clinton's house but was left in the custody of John Jacob Astor who acquired the Broadway house. William Constable bequeathed the portrait to his son William who was then only seventeen. Several years later William, who lived in Schenectady, asked his sister if she and Hezekiah would keep the portrait for him and on June 8, 1807 it was taken from the Astor residence and placed in the drawing room of the Pierpont's house on Brooklyn Heights. In 1812 William, in need of money, began negotiating with the Washington Society in New York for the sale of the picture, but Anna loved it and persuaded Hezekiah to offer $600, the price William was asking for it, if the Society did not take it. William sold the picture to Hezekiah.

Fourteen years later "believing the Capitol is the proper place for the portrait" - and also at the time himself desiring the money - Hezekiah offered to place the portrait "at the service of the nation at a reasonable consideration". To Anna's great joy the offer was not accepted. Stephen Van Rensselaer of the House Library Committee which was to select a portrait replied "the Committee have determined to employ Stuart to paint the picture. I stated the merits of your picture to the Committee. They think yours may have faded."

While Hezekiah was busy with his northern lands, his Brooklyn property was rapidly growing in value. In 1816 Hezekiah bought the adjoining fifteen acre farm of Robert Debevoise on the north, and he also acquired part of the Remsen farm on the south of his original holding, thus owning in all a tract of about 60 acres with a frontage of 800 feet on the East River and extending back between Love Lane and Remsen Street to the old Jamaica Road or Fulton Street as it was later called. One of the reasons Hezekiah gave up the distillery in 1819 was that he might give greater attention to the development of this property.

Brooklyn had been incorporated as a village in 1815 and authorized to lay out streets. A Dutch surveyor was employed for this purpose and he proposed to establish blocks 200 feet square bounded by streets only 40 feet in width. Hezekiah considered this a wasteful plan; he thought the streets should be wider and the blocks larger. He therefore employed at his own expense an English surveyor named Thomas Poppleton to make a plan for the Heights. Poppleton surveyed all the village from Fulton Ferry to Joralemon Street and made a map laying down all the streets, buildings and wharves then existing with great accuracy, and laying out all the ground south of the Hicks estate at Clarke Street in blocks 400 and 500 feet long with streets 50 and 60 feet wide. This plan was adopted by the village.

Pierrepont Street was laid out in 1819 although as late as March, 1829, Anna wrote Hezekiah at Albany "We had another kind and really friendly visit from LeRoy de Chaumont and it was no small effort to wade thro Pierrepont St. mud. Henry with proper attention ordered up a carriage to take him home, but it arrived too late."

Hicks Street was started in 1822. On September 26 in that year Anna reported to Hezekiah: "Building and improvement progress here, they are busily employed 'graduating' Hicks St. which is now so dug away tis not passable for ladies. Gentleman Hicks's house makes quite a show and the two houses near Coopers are almost under cover, Lieutenant Weaver and family are to occupy Waring Cottage, and Tucker advertises the square he purchased of you....Tredwell I hear has bought in the rear of Tucker and as soon as you open Hicks St. it is to be lighted.

In 1825 Hezekiah as a Trustee of the Village and Chairman of the Street Committee had a plan prepared for an open space from Fulton Ferry to Joralemon Street that would be 155 feet wide from the east side of Furman Street, include the whole Heights and provide a promenade 75 feet wide on the top of the Hill. Unfortunately this and also later attempts to make this superb location available to the public fell through.

Land speculation in Brooklyn really began in 1826 when Charles Hoyt forced the laying out of Henry Street through the farm of old Tunis Joralemon who had bought his place in 1801 and sold milk and vegetables in the New York market. A little later Hezekiah laid out a street on his property which he called Clinton Street after the Governor. Joralemon was strenuously opposed to having this street go through his farm mainly because he was opposed to Clinton and "the big Ditch" and did not want a street named after him, but Hezekiah forced it through by action of the Trustees of Brooklyn.

Halfway between Pierrepont and Remsen Streets from Hicks to Clinton he laid out another street which he named Constable Street after his father-in-law. In 1834 he sold to the then City of Brooklyn a parcel of land along Fulton Street to be used by the City "for the purpose of erecting a City Hall thereon and to be kept as an open public square or park and enclosed by an Iron railing or fence except such part thereof as shall be required and used as street aforesaid". Later Hezekiah heard a man remark on the incongruity of naming a street near the City Hall after one of the lowest ranks of municipal officials; he changed its name to Montague Place.

By this time Hezekiah was not only selling lots, he was also buying land. For one thing he was trying to straighten out property lines so that rectangular lots could be developed and sensible units built; for another, speculation was becoming intense. By the mid-thirties there was a true land boom in Brooklyn and lots on Hezekiah's land, 25 by 100 feet, were selling at $4,500 apiece.

Hezekiah died at Brooklyn on August 11, 1938.

Three years later when the panic of 1837 had already reduced some of the speculative values his executors valued the Brooklyn property at $1,096,200; the northern lands at $801,000; personal property (including the portrait of Washington at $5,000) at $20,300; and cash on hand $23,500. Outstanding were notes and mortgages of nearly $272,000, the principal debt being a mortgage of $120,000 to John Jacob Astor. The net estate in August 1841 was thus placed at a fraction under $1,670,000.

By his will Hezekiah left Anna an annuity of $7,500 a year and all his personal property, "but from this bequest I except the original full length portrait of Washington painted by Stuart". This together with all his real estate went to his "executors, in trust, to pay all my just debts, and also to pay said annuities, and to comply with the directions herein contained". One of these directions was that the executors provide a proper residence for his wife at the expense of the estate. She was to continue "to occupy our present residence including the mansion house, out houses and land contained within the following boundaries, viz:- Pierrepont-street, Hicks-street, Remsen-street, and the brink of the Heights on the East River, so long as she shall think fit to reside there, or until they shall think it proper to sell, lease or dispose of the said premises or some part thereof". In that event the executors might let her have any house in the estate, or they might within certain limitations rent or buy or build her a house to be considered part of the estate.

Recognizing "that my estate will be composed chiefly of unimproved lands, which are gradually rising in value under the regular operation of an uniform system of sale and settlement, and will require not less than six or seven years to bring it to a condition admitting of a beneficial division" he directed that final settlement and division of the estate be postponed until November, 1844.

Then he offered the advice to his heirs "to retain the portion of real estate set off to them in the said partition, as a fund which will probably increase in value faster than money at interest, and which will counteract the continual depreciation of our currency, and be more safe than any other investment. I also advise them to sell land in the northern and north-western parts of this state, to actual settlers only, and to sell lands in the city of Brooklyn, to such only as will build first rate dwelling houses thereon, and to rely for income and support on the proceeds of such sales, and, if necessary, on temporary loans. But this advice is to be considered as such only, and not as compulsory or binding directions."

The task facing the executors, who were his sons William and Henry and his son-in-law Joseph A. Perry, husband of his daughter Emily /No 5, below/, was no easy one. The will had been drawn early in 1837 when Brooklyn land prices were still booming. But during the succeeding years prices fell off by more than a third, while the northern lands were unavailable as a source of loans. Yet mortgage interest and principal had to be paid; annuities provided; and all the expenses of maintaining the property met. When late in 1844 discussion were begun concerning the division of the estate differences of opinion developed between the executors and several of the sons-in-law. A law suit was threatened and then suddenly the executors were offered a large sum for a strip of property running through the Mansion which would permit George S. Howland and his associates to bring Montague Place down, through a tunnel under the Heights, to the ferry they proposed to run to New York.

This was in 1845, seven years after Hezekiah's death. Anna was living at the Mansion she so dearly loved with two of her daughters. "I have always supplicated His help & direction for my dear Henry in his arduous trying situation thinking I c^d bear any thing if he was assisted with his burthen & family union preserved, well remembering the exceeding trial and suffering almost 'unto death' of his Father in regard to my family & his brothers & sisters in law. And when my dear Henry announced to me there was a prospect of selling to a company this place, that by so doing he could pay all the debts, stop a suit in Chancery which Mr B/artow/intended to try, settle the Estate & let every one know what belonged to them - I answered if so my son do not think of me. I cannot aid you but by prayer and that I shall not cease to do. I am a stranger & a pilgrim. I have long ago crucified pride and had my worldly attachments weakened and am ready to second you in any thing that is best for the whole. I shall never stand in your way; and I trust you may succeed. I said no more. I walked quietly away & went to prayer." But it was a bitter blow, notwithstanding. All of her thirteen children except William had been borne here. Here is where she and Hezekiah had had so many happy hours, "and now at 62 am to begin a new life; every old association with the home of my youth to be broken up", and the beautiful site and old mansion to be no more.

A suggestion was made that the old Mansion be moved to a new site but this was opposed by Anna and her daughters. Instead, Henry found a charming house at the corner of Pierrepont and Willow Streets which the executors bought from a Mr Boyd, remodelled, and furnished for Anna. On July 28, 1846, the portrait of Washington, which Anna had purchased from the executors, was moved to the new house. The next day all the furniture except that in the dining room and the kitchen was transferred. Anna decided to spend one last night in the house even though it meant sleeping on the floor. On the 30th, at 3:30 in the afternoon, she left the old Mansion and accompanied Henry to her "new residence which she surveyed for the first time since it was furnished and was much pleased with it". The next day Henry went through the Mansion for the last time removing all that was of utility or value, including the panel from the Hall mantel. Then he sold the buildings on the property for $100 for the lumber in them, and the Pierrepont Mansion disappeared.

A first floor plan and the exact location of the Mansion in relation to present streets, however, will be found on page

Although the sale of the Mansion and the land which became Montague Street permitted the discharge of the Astor mortgage and greatly improved the condition of the estate, further disagreements as to the interpretation of the will arose. Seriously strained relations developed between the sons-in-law and the executors, appeals were made to the courts to settle various disputed points, and it was not for another seven years - fifteen years after Hezekiah's death - that the estate was finally settled. Each heir then received a share of the Brooklyn property and a share of the upstate lands. The division was accepted by all as fair and reasonable. Rather than incur further family disunity the executors did not appeal from a ruling by the court that they were not entitled to commissions on sales contracts (as had always been Hezekiah's practice) but only on final sales. With the termination of all court proceedings and the partition of the estate family harmony was in fact restored. Actually the unexpected additional delay, costly though it was for a time in family feelings, quite possibly worked in the long run for the benefit of each individual, because the executors did a very effective job in managing the estate, weathering the period of lowest prices and discharging the principal debts of the estate in an orderly manner and without having to sell any property at prices which might have been disastrous to the interests of the heirs.

For thirteen years Anna lived at Pierrepont and Willow Streets though occasionally, of course, visiting children and friends and in 1854 going to Niagara Falls with Ellen /No (13), below/ and Dr. Minor. For most of these years the Minors lived with Anna and Dr. Minor had his office in the house although he became fairly disgusted with the disorders of northern living and threatened to return to the south.

On Christmas Day, 1850, Anna handed Henry a letter which she had written him that day "giving me her full length picture of Washington to remain in her house during her life".*

Christmas was always an important occasion with the family and each year as many as possible foregathered for Christmas dinner with Anna. In 1855 Henry noted that the only absentees were Theresa /No (11), below/ and her family and Dr Minor who was in Virginia because of his mother's illness. He noted that at that time Anna's family consisted of 14 children and children-in-law and thirty-two grandchildren "healthy in mind & body, well formed and good looking, and Mother now in her 73^d year in good health & spirits, very active & only beginning to fail a little in her hearing."

Four years later Anna died at her house on Pierrepont Street, November 7, 1859.

* After Anna's death the portrait was removed to the house which Henry had built in 1856 at No 1 Pierrepont Place. Although title passed on his death to his son Henry Evelyn Pierrepont /No 42, below/ and on the latter's death to Robert Low Pierrepont /No 424, below/, the portrait hung in the "blue parlor" at "No 1" until after the death of Anna Jay Pierrepont /No 46, below/. It was then moved to Robert's apartment at 580 Park Avenue, New York City. After Robert's death in 1945 it was sold by his widow to the Brooklyn Museum.
